

architectural point of view this is the worst possible place to build such a large building. The section below from the book gives you a hint as why this location had to be as it is.

Chapter 12 “The Ancient Silence.

If the critics were right, if it was not Constantine who had Peter’s bones removed from the central grave, wrapped in purple cloth, and ...(sorry, this detail is omitted. It is best read in context of the book. I don’t want to ruin the fun of reading it.)

the one thing is clear: the transfer must have taken place before the Emperor’s dramatic arrival on the scene. But who, in that case, did order the removal? And when was it done and for what possible reason? Instinct whispers that the answers to those tantalizing questions may well provide the key to much that is still, more than a dozen years after Pope Paul’s announcement, at odds in the history of the relics.

Doubts about the grateful Emperor having arranged the transfer are not only legitimate, they are inescapable. Look closely at the Icon of Jesus Christ and the grill above it. Why is it so lopsided? Or is it lopsided? And why is the cross to the left upside down? You will have to read the book to get the answer to this and so many other questions.

Because the author relates the information as it was chronologically revealed, you will find yourself anxiously awaiting the newly discovered facts that come with the turning of each page.
